WHO

The typical “older adult” caregiver is a 78.9-year-old white female, currently caring for one adult, typically a 77.1-year-old close relative (spouse, adult child, or sibling) who needs care because of a long-term physical condition.

WHAT

She has been providing care for 5.6 years on average, spending 34 hours a week helping with 1.5 ADLs,² 4.5 IADLs, and medical or nursing tasks. She advocates and communicates on behalf of her loved one, as well as monitors his or her condition to adjust care accordingly. She is the sole, unpaid care provider for her loved one and provides care without the assistance of paid help. She faces a moderate burden of care (3).

WORK AND CAREER

The average older caregiver does not work. She is married or living with a partner and is in very good or good health. She has taken some college courses (no degree), or has a college degree of some sort (associate’s, bachelor’s, or higher). Her average household income is $52,600.

ABOUT THE CARE RECIPIENT

The care recipient typically lives with the caregiver.

This profile summarizes data from the Caregiving in the U.S. 2015 research study, jointly conducted with the National Alliance for Caregiving and AARP.¹ While the data presented below provide aggregate information about the average caregiver, it should be noted that the face of caregiving is changing. Family caregivers come in all variations and circumstances—from the grandson helping his grandmother out by cutting the grass and driving her to the store a couple hours a week; to the mother helping her adult son 10 hours a week with various activities due to his post-traumatic stress disorder; to the adult daughter caring for her mother with Alzheimer’s; to the wife caring for her husband around the clock to deal with his stroke, diabetes, and wound care.

IMPACT OF PROVIDING CARE

This older caregiver typically feels she had no choice in taking on care for her loved one. It's a 50-50 toss-up as to whether she expects to continue to be a caregiver over the next 5 years. She reports little to no physical strain, a moderate amount of emotional stress, and little to no financial strain as a result of caregiving.

- 1 National Alliance for Caregiving (NAC) and AARP Public Policy Institute, Caregiving in the U.S., 2015 (Bethesda, MD: NAC, and Washington, DC: AARP, June 2015).
- 2 ADLs include those tasks that provide assistance with basic personal tasks such as bathing, dressing, using the toilet, transferring to or from a bed or chair, caring for incontinence, and eating. IADLs are supports for everyday tasks, including housework, managing money, taking medication, shopping for groceries or clothes, using communication devices (like telephones), and caring for pets, among others. About the National Alliance for Caregiving

Established in 1996, the National Alliance for Caregiving is a non-profit coalition of national organizations focusing on advancing family caregiving through research, innovation, and advocacy. The Alliance conducts research, does policy analysis, develops national best-practice programs, and works to increase public awareness of family caregiving issues. Recognizing that family caregivers provide important societal and financial contributions toward maintaining the well-being of those they care for, the Alliance supports a network of 80+ state and local caregiving coalitions and serves as Secretariat for the International Alliance of Carer Organizations.
