Paid Family And Medical Leave Is Essential For Older Adults, Too

When people think of paid family and medical leave, they often think of parents taking time off to bond with their newborns. As important as that is, an often-overlooked group that also urgently needs a robust system of paid leave is older Americans — even those who are retired.

Congress and President Joe Biden need to turn into law the legislative proposal for paid family leave when they hammer out the $3.5 trillion budget reconciliation package now in negotiations.

Retirees' Need for Caregivers Varies Widely

Nothing causes dread in a retiree quite like the prospect of having to go into a nursing home someday or becoming dependent on someone who comes into the house to help with routine daily needs.

But media reports or studies with alarming predictions of infirmity in old age are not very useful to retirees or their family members. A new study provides a more nuanced picture of the various scenarios that can play out.

Researchers at the Center for Retirement Research estimated that roughly one in five 65-year-olds will die without using any care, and another one in five will need only minimal care.

But one in four will have such severe

Supporting the Invisible, Unpaid Army of Alzheimer's Caregivers

There's an invisible, unpaid workforce caring for the 6 million Americans currently living with Alzheimer's disease. The USC Schaeffer Center for Health Policy and Economics estimates that 11 million family caregivers bear this emotional, physical and financial burden, mostly on their own.

USC experts say that while we wait for better Alzheimer's treatments, there's something we can do right now: Turn our attention to the caregivers.

"We have been waiting decades for efficacious treatments or a cure, but the social sciences have an important role to play in identifying opportunities to reduce the health, economic and social costs of Alzheimer's disease and other dementias needs that they will require high-intensity support for three years or more. The largest group of people – 38 percent – will fall somewhere in the middle: they are likely to need a moderate amount of care for one to three years. A strong indicator of how much assistance someone will require is whether they are healthy in their late 60s.

PATIENT AND CAREGIVER STUDIES

COVID-19 Study

The University of Tennessee College of Nursing is seeking adults who are currently providing care (at least 8 hours a week) to an older adult with a chronic condition.

Are you a caregiver for an older adult with a chronic condition? Please consider taking part in this important research study to understand caregiving during #COVID-19. The University of Tennessee College of Nursing is seeking adults who are currently providing care (at least 8 hours a week) to an older adult with a chronic condition for a research study. The purpose of the study is to understand the experiences of caregivers during COVID-19. The study involves responding to an online survey questionnaire with questions related to caregiving and one interview to talk about their experiences using online caregiving resources. The one-time interview takes approximately 30–45 minutes to complete. Participants will receive a $25 Amazon gift card for completing the interview and a separate $10 Amazon gift card for completing the survey.

How Emerging U.S. Children’s Hospice Homes are Fulfilling an Unmet Need for Overnight Respite

ARCH joined the BREAK Exchange to present this webinar with Jonathan Cottor, MBA, MPH, Father, Advocate, co-founder of Ryan House in Phoenix, Arizona. Ryan House was recognized by ARCH as an Innovative and Exemplary Respite Service in 2020.

The #1 wish that all families with a child on a life-limited journey wants is a cure, next is some sleep. The U.K. Children’s Hospice Home model started almost 40 years ago with Helen House and has grown to over 54 homes today around the globe. This simple concept focuses on family and caregiver support by providing overnight respite, and pediatric palliative and end-of-life hospice care throughout a child’s journey. Thankfully three communities have succeeded in opening this much needed care model in the U.S., and many more are in various stages of development.

RESEARCH & RESOURCES

There are 23 million working caregivers in this country.

One in six working Americans provides unpaid care to a family member or friend with a chronic, serious, or disabling health condition. Cancer researcher Shrivanya Ramaswamy counts herself among the privileged minority in this significant, but historically marginalized, group.

Employed by a Fortune 500 pharmaceutical in the Boston Area, Ramaswamy has a steady salary and access to copious caregiver-friendly benefits, among them paid family medical leave, backup elder care, assistance referral services, and flexible work arrangements.

Yet, during the four years that Ramaswamy lived with and cared for both her aging parents, she made little use of what was on offer. "It took time I didn't have to go over what was available... and going to HR for help felt too public and impersonal," she says. Though she desperately wanted a more flexible schedule, she never considered asking. "I had colleagues who worked some days from home.

"I'd find myself staring at my computer screen, unable to think at work, partially because I was exhausted and partly because I was so worried about what was going on at home," she says. "I know that I brought some of this on myself. But the truth is I didn't feel comfortable discussing my caregiving issues at work and never thought of my employer as a solution to my problems."

Ramaswamy is, indeed, among the most privileged working caregivers in this country. Still, her story illustrates many of the issues that have generally stood between caregivers and the

Lessons from the Workplace: Caregiving During COVID-19

In the first article of its new Spotlight series, Social Innovations in Caregiving, the National Alliance for Caregiving details the hardships the COVID-19 crisis magnified for millions of working caregivers and explores the mismatch between what family caregivers need to meet the demands of working while caregiving and what benefits and supports employers offer. "The pandemic has exposed the reality that working Americans must too often choose between caring for loved ones and holding onto their jobs," says Grace Whiting, President, and CEO of NAC.

Offering potential solutions on how employers can address this mismatch, NAC advances recommendations for workplace policies and practices that employers can provide to caregivers. These recommendations include flextime, compressed workweeks, and public policy strategies to help reinforce workplace solutions such as redefined paid leave criteria.

NAC Presents The Circle of Care Guidebook for Caregivers of Children with Rare and/or Serious Illnesses

The National Alliance for Caregiving is proud to present The Circle of Care Guidebook for Caregivers of Children with Rare and/or Serious Illnesses, a new resource designed in partnership with Global Genes and with support by Mallinckrodt Pharmaceuticals to provide caregivers with the support, services and specialized information they need to care for a child with a rare and/or serious illness. This guidebook offers an extensive list of resources to help a caregiver in any situation throughout the entirety of their journey as a rare disease caregiver, compiled by those in the rare disease space and caregivers themselves. This list is supplemented by the specialized information needed in order to care for a child with a rare and/or serious illness. If you or someone you know cares for a child living with a rare and/or serious illness, make sure to check out the guidebook at the link below.

You'll learn about:

- The process of getting an accurate diagnosis for a rare and/or serious illness;
- Genetic testing, clinical trials and support groups that can help;
- Information on treatment and care coordination with specialized teams;
- Understanding the cost of care and treatment;
- Advocating for your child, their care and in their disease space;
- Empowering your child to manage their rare and/or serious illness through all aspects of their life, including when they become an adult; and
- Caring for yourself and your family.

There is also an appendix with a comprehensive list of online resources, supports and services for caregivers, the child living with the rare and/or serious illness, and his or her family that are referenced throughout the guidebook.

What's Public Health Got To Do With... Family Caregiving?

Trust for America's Health (TFAH) has published a blog, "What's Public Health Got To Do With... Family Caregiving?," to launch it's new monthly blog series on Age-Friendly Public Health Systems. This series is designed to stir up conversation, generate interest, and challenge healthy aging stakeholders to engage more deeply in age-friendly public health issues.

Author of this month's blog on "What's Public Health Got To Do With... Family Caregiving?," Megan Wolfe, TFAH's Senior Policy Development Manager, outlines five potential roles for public health departments to support caregivers, organized according to TFAH's AFPHS 5Cs Framework. The roles include collecting and disseminating data, coordinating existing supports and services, connecting and convening multiple sectors, communicating, and complementing existing supports.

Home Is Where the Care Is

What if you were one of the 2 million adults who are homebound in the United States? Wouldn't you want care to come to you? With the nation's older adult population increasing, home-based primary care is quickly becoming the future of health care for patients who are medically complex. New resources share needed information about delivering primary care in the home:

- The Better Care Playbook's Home-Based Primary Care Collection provides research, resources and tools for delivering care at home. The collection includes blogs from Rush@Home detailing its care model elements and implementation insights, and the Department of Veterans Affairs highlighting its successful program.
- A Home Centered Care Institute (HCCI) House Calls 101 course offers a simulated educational experience to help you get started with home-based primary care.

Report: The United States Should Recognize and Support Caregiving Youth

In the United States, more than 5.4 million children and adolescents under age 18 provide care for family members who are aging or have chronic illness, disability, or other health conditions that require assistance.

In this policy study published in the Society for Research in Child Development's Social Policy Report, the authors describe youth's care for the family and highlight the increasing prevalence, global challenges, and uneven successes of measurement and categorization. They briefly summarize research on how caregiving affects youth's academic, social, and emotional well-being. Next, they present novel, emerging evidence from the public school-based 2019 Youth Risk Behavior Survey for the State of Florida, which suggests that as many as 24 percent of middle school students and 16 percent of high school students provide at least some care to the family on a regular basis. Drawing on this evidence, the authors' discuss targeted social programs which have been shown to promote the well-being of caregiving youth outside of the United States, as well as a 13-year-old school-based intervention in The School District of Palm Beach County, Florida.

The report concludes with specific recommendations for a path toward recognizing and supporting caregiving youth via policy and practice in the United States. Its aim is to increase the awareness and feasibility of identifying and supporting caregiving youth and their families via government-organized data collection and targeted social policies.
